OLHA SILINA, University of British Columbia & PIMS

A case study: Ukraine's journey from inclusive education to inclusive society

In this talk, I trace Ukraine's journey implementing accessible and inclusive education in schools. As the war sharply increased the number of people living with physical and psychosocial disabilities, I examine the recent initiatives to help their participation in higher education and society more broadly. Finally, I consider how Canadian universities can draw on Ukraine's experience to support students with disabilities, such as making it easier to enter or return to higher education and giving the educators and community organizations the right training.