JOHNNA PARENTEAU, University of Regina
A Party of One: Navigating Grad School as a Woman in Mathematics

Pursuing a graduate degree in mathematics challenges not only how students solve problems but also how they see themselves as researchers. For women in mathematics, this journey often involves navigating both the difficulties of research and the subtle dynamics of belonging in a male-dominated field. In this talk, I will share a candid look at my graduate school experience and discuss some initiatives that foster peer support and community.