
RICHARD HOSHINO, Northeastern University

Unexpected Open Doors

In my brief remarks, I will describe my adjustment from the classroom to virtual teaching via Zoom, and share with you two unexpected open doors: how synchronous teaching helped me create global communities in my spheres of influence, and how my comfort in teaching online helped me land a new job. Finally, I'll describe a Math Prep course that I will be running in August, via Zoom, for a large group of students in six cities at my new multi-campus university.