YVAN SAINT-AUBIN, Yvan Saint-Aubin, Université de Montréal
The Temperley–Lieb algebra, indecomposable representations and statistical physics

Algebra has played a crucial role in modern physics, particularly through representation of groups and Lie algebras. Recently representations of associative algebras have also played an important role. I shall describe how the representation theory of the Temperley–Lieb algebra, an associative algebra, enters the description of phase transition in two-dimensional statistical physics.