GARY MACGILLIVRAY, University of Victoria

Cops and robber on oriented graphs, and generalizations

We use the context of playing on oriented graphs as a vehicle to talk about how the various versions of the cops and robber game all admit the same "solution" in the sense of how to tell which player wins, how to determine each player's optimal strategy, and how to figure out the length of the game assuming the cops win.