
CHRIS RASMUSSEN, San Diego State University
Dynamical Systems Instead of Calculus

In this presentation I outline how we might forgo calculus and start with dynamical systems. This approach would build on students intuitive and everyday experience with rate of change and engage them in realistic modeling problems, from population growth to climate change. Leveraging the instructional design theory of Realistic Mathematics Education, the course would embrace qualitative, graphical, and numerical approaches and focus on underlying concepts.