
REKA SZASZ, University of Toronto

Teaching-specific mathematics knowledge lying on the boundary of mathematics and education: dilemmas arising from a Mathematics for Teachers course

It is agreed that the academic and professional components of teacher training need to be connected, and Mathematics for Teachers courses are being offered at a growing number of universities as an attempt to realize that connection. This talk is going to present such a course, emphasizing the dilemmas arising from the fact that it deals with the boundary of the academic and educational discipline.