
ALEXANDER KARP, Teachers College, Columbia University

Mathematicians and pre-college mathematics education: Thinking about productive involvement

The presentation will be devoted to a discussion of certain aspects of the current state of mathematics education in high and middle schools, and to the role that the mathematics community might play in its improvement. In particular, the discussion will touch on issues related to the content of the school course in mathematics and to the preparation and professional development of mathematics teachers.