
JAN REIMANN, Penn State University

Algorithmically random point processes

We develop a theory of algorithmically random point processes. Point processes are an important class of random closed sets important for the probabilistic modeling of geometric data. We study how the randomness of a point process as a whole is related to the algorithmic randomness of its points. We use these results to prove consistency results for fractal dimension estimators, based on Kolmogorov complexity.