PETER GIBSON, York University
The profile of a relation

Local-global results in the theory of relational structures have been a recurring theme in Robert Woodrow's work. We discuss one such result, analyzing the consequences of the hypothesis that a relational structure has only finitely many isomorphism types of size κ, for some infinite cardinal κ.