
KIRSTEN MORRIS, University of Waterloo

Optimal controller and actuator design for partial differential equations

Control can be very effective in altering dynamics. One issue for partial differential equations is that performance depends not only on the controller, but also on its location and spatial design. Existence of concurrent optimal controller and spatial distribution has been established for several classes of partial differential equations and objectives. Some of these results will be discussed and illustrated with examples.