
ROBERT BORGERSEN, University of Manitoba

From Flops To Fortunate And Flourishing: Expeditions to Facilitate Community Using Technology

In my experience, being a member of an active and engaged community of learners can contribute to success in post-secondary mathematics, and using online tools to connect is second nature to our students today. After all, when the students who began university this fall entered their teenage years, Instagram had over 300 million users and Facebook had over a billion. In this talk, I will share some of my experiences using technology to facilitate community among and with my students, including successes, failures, and lessons learned.