LUC DEVROYE, McGill University

Random trees

Random trees appear in many contexts. We make an attempt at unifying various models encountered in computer science, discrete mathematics, combinatorics and biology. Parameters of interest to us include the height, the profile and the shape of these trees. Various recent developments in this respect will be reviewed.