
STAN YOSHINOBU, University of Toronto

Lifting Up

Outreach work can be a powerful way to support individuals and their communities to build stronger relationships with mathematics, and hence a potential pathway to increase diversity in Mathematics. In this talk I'll share insights from my involvement in several different outreach projects I've been involved in since 2001, where a common thread is "lifting up." Lifting up is the act of empowering students, teachers, faculty, and others, where they have more agency and opportunities.