
JAMES EVANS, University of Puget Sound
New Views of the Antikythera Mechanism

The Antikythera mechanism, a gearwork astronomical computer, was built around 150 BC by an ancient Greek mechanic, lost in a shipwreck around 80 BC, and recovered in 1901. Recent study has greatly improved our comprehension of the mechanism. This talk will describe the current state of understanding and present some new results by the University of Puget Sound Antikythera Mechanism research team.