
NATHALIE SINCLAIR, Simon Fraser University

Using dynamic mathematical imagery to promote creativity

This talk will focus on the use of dynamic geometry software to offer students visual and kinetic representations of mathematical concepts. I will argue that these representations help provide students with the kind of "intuitive" understandings that so many mathematicians use to engage in creative work. The examples will draw on a range of topics including linear algebra, topology and functions.