ZHONGWEI SHEN, University of Alberta
Population dynamics under climate change

Reaction-diffusion equations in shifting environments are used to model the evolution of single species under climate change. Questions of theoretical importance are the effects of the shifting environment on the long-term dynamics of solutions. In this talk, I will report some relevant results about such equations without or with Allee effect.