
GAIL WOLKOWICZ, McMaster University

Decay Consistent Models of Growth, Competition, and Predation

Incorporating delay in various models of population interactions will be explored including competition and predation. In all of the models, any terms representing growth of a population take into consideration that individuals that do not survive, do not contribute to the growth of the population. The models are formulated so that survival is consistent with the decline terms in the model.